

Multithreading in Java is a pivotal feature that allows concurrent execution of two or more parts of a program for maximum utilization of CPU. Each part of such a program is called a thread, and each thread defines a separate path of execution. This is one of the powerful capabilities of Java, which can improve the performance of complex, resource-intensive applications.

title	title	title	title
-------	-------	-------	-------